San Dieguito's own art guild is growing

This is another in a continuing series profiling the art galleries in the San Dieguito and Del Mar area.

Somewhere between a garage sale and New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art are the smaller galleries that criss-cross the country. San Dieguito's Art Guild is one local example of what a community gallery can be; a place where paintings are hung not so much to make a sale, but to allow local artists an avenue to show their works.

The guild itself has about 100 members while the gallery is relatively large; one main gallery room with half a dozen smaller rooms off to the side. Members can rent space on any of the walls and each month a featured artist is chosen. (Jeanette Nelson is just finishing up a month's run on the featured wall.)

Although the bulk of the guild's members are on an amateur level, some of the members do consider themselves professional artists. Most members work in all mediums but the gallery's floor space is limited and thus, rarely is sculpture displayed.

Bonny Park, guild president, says the group welcomes anyone interested in art.

The guild is also becoming popular for its monthly meetings held at Quail Gardens in Encinitas. During the get-togethers, guild members can hear a speaker on various art subjects. Park adds the meetings are open to the general public.

Originally located in Del Mar, the San Dieguito Art Guild is one of the oldest in the area. It's been headquartered in Leucadia during the past 10 years in what once was an art studio that produced jugs.

Now the guild is turning its attention to the future. It offers a yearly scholarship to MiraCosta College for students studying art. In addition, guild members are offering paintings to be sold at auctions benefitting local schools.

And the members are looking forward to the guild's annual Art Mart, set for Dec. 9. Besides the sale that will take place, there are cash awards for the best paintings.
