The Off-Track Gallery is on the Right Track

Unusual art, not so unusual in Encinitas

by Darcy De Marco

A mple evidence of North County's abundant artistic talent can be found at the Offtrack Gallery in Encinitas. Located in the Old Train Station on Highway 101, the gallery brings to the community beautiful examples of art and crafts, ranging from handmade paper to Oriental brush painting, created by members of the gallery and available for purchase. In doing so, the gallery benefits both artist and public by providing the opportunity for the two to interact in a casual atmosphere.

The Offtrack Gallery was founded as a cooperative in May 1982, on the premise that art and artists are an integral part of the community. In the spirit of this premise, at least one member of the cooperative is always on hand at the gallery during business hours. Currently consisting of eight members, the cooperative sponsors demonstrations by the artists at the gallery on the first Sunday of each month. These demonstrations supplement the ongoing exhibition of work by each of the artists that occupies much of the gallery. In addition, each month the cooperative highlights the creations of one of its members.

Cooperative members use a variety of media to express their creativity. Art forms include weavings, Raku pottery, Oriental brush paintings, porcelain, air brush clothing, photography, handmade paper and Scherenschnitte. Several of the artists are nationally recognized; photographer Susan Blanchard's work has appeared in Nature, and Nancy Rupp's Oriental brush paintings won the APS Award at the Sumi-e Society of America Exhibition in 1984.

Of the art forms presented at the gallery, perhaps the least well-known to the public is Scherenschnitte, traditional German scissorcuttings. Now a nearly extinct folk art, Scherenschnitte features delicate designs cut from long-fiber cotton paper and mounted on ragboard. Motives include wildflowers and other traditional scenes. Since the art is no longer taught, artist Britta Kling learned her craft by studying original works in Swiss and German museums and reproductions in old books. Kling never uses a pattern and cuts each design only once. Her new series, "Seven Swans a Swimming," is on display at the gallery through December 31.

This month, the gallery is celebrating the season with its annual holiday show, through December 24. Gallery patrons may buy original Christmas ornaments made of porcelain and other materials, as well as the paintings, photographs and wearable art that continue to be shown. Normally open 10-5 Tuesday through Sunday, the gallery will be open on Mondays for the remainder of the shopping season. Parking is available on Highway 101.
